tioned. What especially characterizes it is a wealth of statistics bearing on the economic resources, the commercial output, and the governmental provisions of Japan. The importance of the geographical factor is fully recognized, but the contention is that it is not the only factor, for the reason that the racial elements of the British Isles, Celtic, Gallic and Anglo-Saxon have not been unified. It is claimed that Japan is aiming to be the paramount world power of the Pacific, but that there is no danger of a commercial Yellow Peril, and that Korea has everything to gain by remaining under Japanese control, while the commercial possibilities of France in Japan are said to be well-nigh negligible.
